Revisit the Pentecost narrative and Pauline letters from a Wesleyan and Pentecostal perspective to reconsider how the charismatic work of the Spirit might yet catalyze a fresh Christian witness for the present time.

PENTECOSTALISM has been fueled over the last 100 years primarily by its missionary zeal. Thousands of miles of ministerial and missionary travel by horseback became the model for the circuit rider of the 19th century and for the global METHODIST missionary of the 20th century. Yet the challenge for MISSION among both groups, not to mention for the Christian church as a whole, are steep.

Conceive of a METHODICOSTAL witness.

Amos Yong, director of the Center for Missiological Research and professor of theology and mission at Fuller Theological Seminary, Yong's scholarship has been foundational in Pentecostal theology, interacting with both traditional theological traditions and contemporary contextual theologies.
